

That means it's not finding `_rnr_se` in the returned text, which probably means that the authentication process is failing at some point. That would take more debugging than I can offer on this one, but you might start by dissecting the various calls and spitting the results out to console to see if you're getting expected responses.

Eric — Sep 30, 2011 12:15 am

Hehehe. I copied the fixed line from here. Didn't work, as shown. I ran `rdebug` with it. Says something about invalid multibyte character. Turns out, the single quotes weren't regular old single quotes, they were smart quotes. `"` instead of `'`. Works now! Thanks.